Dr. Jonathan Kazdan, Dr. Steven Solomon & Dr. Marisa D'Angelo

You might be surprised about receiving this newsletter discussing, of all things, your dental care.

We hope you realize how important it is to maintain optimum oral health. Therefore, we trust you will spend some time reading this newsletter.

First of all, you should know that every patient's emotional well-being – new or current, young & old - is just as important to us as their oral health. That's why we offer the services outlined on the back of this newsletter.

Secondly, we want you to know that you are in control of every procedure. We provide facts about diagnosis, treatments and fees but the final decision is always yours.

Finally, we wanted you to know that we are always here to help you and your family maintain great oral care, hence the newsletter. Please browse through the information in this newsletter and if you have any questions, feel free to contact us.

We look forward to seeing you soon.

Your Teeth Can't TAKE THE CHILL!

Okay, so the weather is chilly. Your feet are wet, your hands are cold...even your teeth hurt. By the way, why is that?

Many people who suffer from sensitive teeth find it worsens in cooler weather. This is called dentin hypersensitivity. It occurs when the layer of tissue beneath tooth enamel called dentin is stimulated by extreme cold (or hot) temperatures, causing pain.

There are two common causes of dentin hypersensitivity. First of all, what you might not know is that your teeth expand and contract with temperature changes. As this happens over a period of time, your enamel can become cracked, exposing your dentin. The second perpetrator is worn down enamel, (which can happen for a number of reasons) which exposes your root surface and dentin.

Don't worry, hypersensitivity is a common occurrence and can sometimes be eased simply with an over-the-counter desensitizing toothpaste. Or, if the problem is a little more extensive, a dentist can take care of your sensitivity with a number of different treatments.

If you find your teeth really bother you when you're out in cold weather, try breathing through your nose. If you find they become repeatedly irritated with cold and hot temperatures, it's best to make a dental appointment.
